Jews In Arab Lands Are Insecure, Cut Off From Life There

An atmosphere of insecurity surrounds Jews in most Moslem countries, particularly those affected by Arab nationalism, according to the 1959 annual report of the Joint Distribution Committee. "This is especially true in Egypt, where the Jewish community is being progressively cut off from the economic life of the country, and is apparently doomed to a purely vegetative existence," the report said.

"In Algeria, the future is obscured by the continuing war between the independence movement and the French authorities. In Tunisia and Morocco, however, the most immediate problems are the increasing economic difficulties, which have had a particularly unfavorable effect on the Jews living in both countries."

More than 214,000 men, women, and children were aided last year, the report noted, says the New York Times. Of these, 105,000 were in Moslem countries, principally in North Africa and Iran. Others assisted by J. D. C., the major American agency aiding distressed Jews abroad, included about 54,750 in Europe, more than 47,500 in Israel and about 7,000 in other areas.

The report points out that the numbers requiring aid were larger than in 1958, even though 1959 was "a year of no great crisis, no terrible emergencies." Moses A. Leavitt, executive vice chairman of the committee, reported that most of these helped in 1959 were no longer technically classified as "refugees," but that their needs were as great or greater "than they had been during the days of homeless wandering."

He said the agency's expenditures last year totaled $28,111,600 for its operations in twenty-five countries. For 1960, the agency's budget has been fixed at $29,142,000 to aid 250,000 needy Jews abroad. The major portion of the funds continued to be supplied by nation-wide campaigns of the United Jewish Appeal.

More persons, 85,650, received food, than any other type of assistance. The committee's aid also included cash relief for 38,795 persons, medical care for 30,615, educational assistance for 70,135, and cultural and religious programs for 36,155. A total of 5,819 in homes for the aged were helped, and 5,229 children received other kinds of aid.

The largest program in Europe affected 19,000 men, women and children in Poland, including medical care and assistance to Jewish orphans, says the New York Times. Mr. Leavitt said that Jewish communities in Europe remained depleted of "ranks of leadership, both lay and professional."

Israel, Argentina Rift Over Nazi Is Closed

Israel and Argentina announced that the "incident" between them was closed. Their joint statement was in reference to the dispute following the abduction of Adolf Eichmann from Argentine territory by Israelis, who flew him to Israel for trial as a leading Nazi war criminal.

The joint statement, issued simultaneously in Jerusalem and Buenos Aires, reports the New York Times, said the two Governments had been "animated by the wish to comply with the resolution of the Security Council of June 23, in which the hope was expressed "that the traditionally friendly relations between the two countries will be advanced."

The "incident" which it closed was described in the joint statement as arising "out of the action taken by Israeli nationals which infringed fundamental rights of the state of Argentina."

There was no reference to the "adequate reparation" that Argentina had been demanding. Presumably the expulsion of Israel's Ambassador, Arieh Levavi, from Buenos Aires July 29 gave Argentina the satisfaction she had demanded.

The joint statement made no mention of a resumption of normal diplomatic relations, but the settlement was thought at Tel Aviv, Israel, to have opened the way to a new exchange of ambassadors. Argentina's Ambassador to Israel, Rodolfo Garcia Arias, was recalled to Buenos Aires on June 12.

Argentina ordered an investigation into the kidnapping of Adolf Eichmann. The order was issued by Federal Judge Leopoldo Isurralde on the basis of a complaint brought by Eichmann's wife, Veronika. Judge Isurralde ruled, however, that Frau Eichmann had no legal right to sue since Eichmann was the person directly affected. Therefore, he said, she can not be a complainant.

Eichmann, a former colonel of Hitler's secret police, helped to organize the murder of 6,000,000 European Jews, says the New York Times. Premier David Ben-Gurion announced May 23 that the German was under arrest in Israel and would stand trial for his life.

The Israeli Government disclosed later that Eichmann had been seized in Argentina by one of several groups of "Jewish volunteers (among them some Israelis)" and "expressed his agreement to go to Israel spontaneously to be tried." Eichmann was reported to have been put aboard a returning El-Al Airlines plane that had taken on Israeli delegation to Argentina's 150th anniversary celebration.

President Arturo Frondizi was "thoroughly indignant" at the seizure, which he called an affront to Argentina. Argentina insisted that Eichmann be returned and the issue was taken to the United Nations. On June 23, the Security Council asked Israel to make "appropriate reparation" for

Publisher Started With Puzzle Book, Revolutionized Book Selling, Was Pianist

Richard Leo Simon, co-founder of the book publishing house of Simon & Schuster, and a figure in New York book publishing for nearly forty years, was 61 years old when he succumbed to a heart attack at his country home on Newfield Avenue, North Stamford, Conn. He and Mrs. Simon also lived at 4701 Grosvenor Avenue, Riverdale, the Bronx.

The first "sss" of "Essandess" — the pen name coined by the partners for their constitutional advertising — Mr. Simon brought to book publishing more than the passion for books that characterizes the trade.

He was one of the first to revolutionize bookselling by employing modern methods of promoting, advertising, merchandising and marketing literary productions, says the New York Times. He was also an accomplished pianist. Mr. Simon got into book publishing by way of music. His father, a well-to-do milliner, was a member of a family intensely interested in music. Their home contained a collection of instruments.

After attending the Ethical Culture School and Columbia University, and serving in World War I, Mr. Simon went to work for a sugar importer, a friend of his father's, who liked the way the young man, a pianist, played the organ.

Mr. Simon switched to selling pianos, and in 1921 he called on Max Lincoln Schuster, then editor of a motor trade magazine, hoping to sell one. The hope was vain. But a copy of "Jean-Christophe," lying around, led to conversation that disclosed a mutual enthusiasm for Romain Rolland, and they became fast friends.

Mr. Simon switched from pianos to books, becoming a salesman on commission only, at first, for Boni & Liveright. Within a year he was sales manager, and his career was under way. In 1924, with about $3,000 of savings, pledges of relatives and friends, and a telephone operator, he and Mr. Schuster opened an office as publishers.

Each book they undertook was a project in itself, but the one that assured their success was a book of crossword puzzles they got the puzzle editors of the old New York World to compile. It, and two successive ones, earned them a profit of $100,000 in their first year.

Mr. Simon and his partner, M. Lincoln Schuster, were young men without experience when they decided, in 1924, to go into business for themselves but they made various kinds of publishing history.

Their first venture, "Crossword Puzzle Book No. 1," became a best seller and the partners always took credit for a large share in starting what became a national pastime, says the New York Times. In 1939, they embarked on a project they had talked about for a long time — publishing good books in paper covers. The result was the immensely successful Pocket Books Inc.

They started in business with $10,000 between them and were successful almost from the beginning. Mr. Simon was once described as a "tall, aggressive super-salesman." He applied this talent in a number of directions. First, he would sell his partner and other members of the staff on one of his "crazy" ideas for a book. Then he would talk the right man into writing it. Finally, he would direct the campaign that got the public to buy it.

The partners, and their business manager, Leon Shimkin — who later became an owner and succeeded Mr. Simon in the partnership when two heart attacks forced his retirement in 1957 — combined literary and artistic enthusiasm with a verve for selling books on a grand scale.

Book publishing to them, was an exciting business, and they carried it on in an atmosphere of high excitement. Their books competed with automobiles in full-page ads.

Mr. Schuster wrote a column, "From the Inner Sanctum," twice weekly for the company's "ad" in The New York Times. Mr. Simon did the same thing weekly, the trade journal, says the New York Times. The Inner Sanctum was their name for the editorial room between their offices.

In their columns they aroused literary excitement by congratulating rival publishers on their coups, plugging books that captured their fancy. But most of all, as in their advertising and promotion for single books, they sent buyers hurrying to bookstores to buy their wares.

Often they had highly profitable sellers, as when Mr. Simon read an article about automobile accidents in The Reader's Digest and got its writer, J. C. Furnas, to produce "Sudden Death and How to Avoid It." It sold more than 360,000 copies.

One of the writers with whom Mr. Simon worked closely was Arthur Schnitzler and this brought a brush with the law. On August 8, 1930, John S. Sumner, secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, descended upon the Simon & Schuster offices and seized 477 copies of Schnitzler's "Casanova's Homecoming." He insisted that the book was obscene but the case never went to trial and the firm was not penalized.

Mr. Simon, like his partner, had a long list of publishing coups to his credit. Among the authors with whom he personally worked were Hendrik Willem van Loon, Arthur Schnitzler, Felix Salten, Ernest Dimnet and Peter Arno. He also brought out for himself — and, it turned out, for others — the Arthur Schnabel edition of Beethoven's Sonatas, a venture in music publishing, and the autobiography of Igor Stravinski, the composer.

Mr. Simon, Mr. Schuster, and Mr. Shimkin were associated with Robert De Graff in 1939 in establishing Pocket Books, which was a pioneer in marketing of cheap paperbound books. In 1946 the partners and Mr. Shimkin sold out to Marshall Field, remaining in charge, says the New York Times. In 1957, when Mr. Simon retired, his associates reacquired ownership.

Besides his widow, the former Andrea Louise Heinemann, once his secretary, Mr. Simon is survived by three daughters, Joanna, Lucy, and Carly; a son, Richard Peter; three brothers: Henry W. Simon, editor and vice president of the publishing house; Alfred E. Simon, of radio station WQXR; and George T. Simon, music critic; and a sister, Mrs. Arthur W. Seligman, a physician.

I.L.O. Reports Post-War Refugee Impact Beneficial

The world-wide impact on the twentieth century's painful age of migration has been detailed in a report published by the International Labor Organization.

In Israel, the report says, the "challenge to the laws of nature and economics" represented by the stream of Jews from Europe could not have been handled so successfully without foreign aid.

In 414 pages of analysis and statistics, the report describes the political and social upheavals and the slowly arising economic benefits that came out of the redrawing of frontiers, the changes of regime and the economic and political pressures that forced millions of Europeans, Middle Easterners and Asians to look for new homes after World War II.

The heaviest political migration hit Germany, which had to cope with more than 12,500,000 refugees, says the New York Times. The problems of adjustment dominated Germany's post-war life and "only now is the final solution within sight," said the report.

In West Germany, the report says, the refugees are completely integrated. The West German economy received a number of benefits from the influx of refugees, including a bigger domestic market and a better supply of labor.

"It is hard to see how the active population of Western Germany, severely handicapped by war losses and with many men kept abroad for some time as prisoners of war, could have coped so quickly with the problem of reconstruction without large-scale immigration of men workers," the report says.

Despite the extent of integration, the former refugees in West Germany have a lower living standard than the population as a whole.

Even though productivity was depressed for a long time as a result of the refugee flow, the report says that "the cost of this relative setback was largely borne by the refugees themselves and the sacrifices made by the local

Le... ...e $500,000 To N.Y. For Children's Zoo

Half a million dollars to build a children's zoo in Central Park has been donated by the former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, and Mrs. Lehman, who celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary by their gift. Park Commissioner Newbold Morris had no hesitancy in accepting the gift. He was sure there would be no opposition to the children's zoo as an "encroachment" on Central Park, such as that which greeted Huntington Hartford's recent gift of $875,000 for a cafe near the Plaza.

The Department of Parks said the zoo would be built adjacent to the existing zoo, on an unused acre of park land just inside Fifth Avenue, between the Sixty-fifth Street entrance to the Transverse Road and the Sixty-sixth Street exit from that road, reports the New York Times. Access to the children's zoo will be by the present pedestrian underpasses beneath the two roadways.

The architects of the Wollman Skating Rink in Central Park, are drawing plans for the children's zoo. The architects envision an ornamental gateway leading down a landscaped, tree-shaded path to low, glass-walled, small-scale buildings. In the buildings and yards will be peaceful animals that children are fond of: rabbits, ducks, geese, doves, lambs, calves, pigs, baby deer, llamas, goats and perhaps even a talking crow.

Stands will be provided to sell food for the animals as well as for the children, and the youngsters will be permitted to hand-feed and pet the tame creatures. The zoo will be similar to the children's zoo in the Bronx and Chicago. It is expected to be ready for public opening next May.

Commissioner Morris expressed appreciation to Mr. and Mrs. Lehman, who celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary by the gift of the $500,000.

"The Central Park Zoo has been one of New York's greatest attractions," the commissioner said. "But it has lacked one appealing feature found in some other zoos in this country and Canada — a children's zoo."

Appeal Of The Committee For The Ghetto Museum In The Kibbutz Of The Ghetto Fighters, In Israel

Following the recent visit in Montreal of Tzivia Lubetkin, the heroic fighter in the uprising of the Warsaw Ghetto, and after listening to her very spirited and informative talk concerning aims and purposes of the Ghetto Museum and Archive in Kibbutz of the Ghetto Fighters, in Israel, of which she is a leading member, a Montreal committee was formed, consisting of representatives of various groupings of the Jewish community.

The Committee calls itself "The Committee for the Ghetto Museum in the Kibbutz of the Ghetto Fighters in Israel". The address of the committee will be the Histadrut Centre, 5101 Esplanade Avenue, Montreal.

The aims of the Committee:

1) To raise necessary funds which will help in the growth and development of the Ghetto Museum, so that it will be possible to accumulate the largest number of exponents to be exhibited, an archive where the largest possible number of documents will be catalogued for purposes of judicial inquiries, research, or other purposes. It is envisioned that the museum will be staffed by a competent group of scientific workers and guardians of these tragic treasures.

2) To help the Ghetto Museum gather in Canada exponents and documents which are, or may be, important to the Museum.

The Montreal Committee is convinced that it is important today, especially since the uncovering and bringing to justice of the monster, Eichmann, not to lose the opportunity of enlightening every conscious Jew towards the necessity of gathering and maintaining the archives of the third destruction. The archive in the Kibbutz of the Ghetto Fighters is one of the most important, organized and created by those heroes and fighters in the Ghetto who managed somehow to survive.

The Montreal Committee for the Ghetto Museum will carry out its mission in various ways: 1) a chain-collection in the newspapers; 2) an appeal to individual donors.

We cannot be certain when any one of us may be in need of the materials which are now at hand, and which will, with our support and cooperation, be enlarged in the Ghetto Museum. When we consider that bestial Nazism has today again raised its wicked head, even on the American continent, the urgency and importance of this task is very clearly brought home.

The hooliganistic demonstrations of George Lincoln Rockwell, the American agitator, and his gang of swastika bearers are a direct challenge to us in Canada to stand on our guard and assist in the building of this monument in the Kibbutz of the Ghetto Fighters, which will serve as a remembrance of the millions of martyrs who fell because the world was seeped in apathy and indifference.

Jews of Montreal! In whatever manner the call should come to you, answer it in your usual generous way. Your help is urgently needed.

Committee of the Ghetto Museum in the Kibbutz of the Ghetto Fighters, Israel: A. Cruzoj, chairman; I. Guberman, vice-chairman; A. Krusner, secretary; B. Halpern, treasurer; Israel Rabinovitch, Melech Ravitch, Y. Elberg, A. Shnaider, A. M. Shurem, F. White, L. Zuker, J. Grossman, P. Trepman, I. Eiley, Jacob Rabinovitch, N. Wilchesky, Eta Weinman, A. Katz, J. Torchin, D. Singerman, P. Cantor, H. Dresher, B. Holtzman, P. Akerman, J. Slawner, A. Kirshenblatt, Mrs. S. Caiserman, Mrs. P. Pepper, Mrs. P. Tendler.

Pour this over the crust and bake for twenty minutes at 350 degrees. Cool for five minutes, and then cover with fifteen ounces of crushed pineapple, well drained and mixed with one-half pint of sour cream. Bake again at 350 degrees for five minutes.

MONTREAL MEETINGS

• TEMPLE EMANU-EL •

Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi: Services are held Friday evenings at 8.15, in the Temple Community House; Hershell H. Lewis, Samuel Garfield, Edward Auerback, Edmund Gordon, Mrs. Josef Aron; Bert Horwitz, Brahms Silver, Maurice Miller, are in charge.

• ZIONIST ORGANIZATION •

Over 800 delegates will convene in Montreal on October 29 for the 35th national convention of the Zionist Organization of Canada, at the Sheraton-Mount Royal Hotel. Lawrence Freiman, of Ottawa, is the national president. The four-day convention will hear a number of speakers, among them the Israeli Ambassador to Canada, the Hon. Yaacov Herzog; and Dr. Salo W. Baron, distinguished Professor of Jewish History, Literature and Institutions, at Columbia University, in New York. It will focus its attention on the historic figure of Dr. Theodor Herzl, the founder of the Zionist Movement, whose 100th anniversary is being celebrated this year by Jewish communities throughout the world. Forty years after the death of Dr. Herzl, a Viennese journalist who electrified European Jewry with his dream of a reborn Jewish State, Israel became a reality. A Canadian-made film, "The Life Of Theodor Herzl", which was written, produced, and directed in Toronto under the sponsorship of the Central Zionist Region, will present in the title role Lloyd Bochner, noted Canadian actor of television and stage; and the nephew of Mrs. Anna Raginsky, of Montreal, former president of Hadassah Organization of Canada. Panel discussions will be devoted to the philosophy of the Zionist Movement; and to specific contemporary problems now confronting the World Zionist Organization. The discussions will be keyed by Dr. Baron whose topic will be, "The Dialogue Between Israel And The Diaspora, A Philosophic Examination Of The Zionist Movement."

Trends In Yiddish Literature

BY S. NIGER, RANKING CRITIC OF YIDDISH LITERATURE, WHOSE FOURTH "YAHRZEIT" WAS RECENTLY OBSERVED

Yiddish literature — like all literatures — contains two continuing and constant currents: the external and the internal. They are separate, but there is a link between them. The characteristics that hinge upon external forces relate to the quantitative aspects of book-production; while the internal, deeper probing trends are concerned with the quality of literary creation.

The most salient external influence on Yiddish literature in recent years is the tragic diminution of Yiddish territory in the last 20 years. Of the former major literary centres: Poland and Lithuania, Soviet Russia, and the Americas, only the last remains. In 1939 the Nazis began their barbaric and destructive assault upon Jewish life and creativity, and a decade later the Bolsheviks exterminated the remnants of Yiddish literature in the Soviet Union. Today we are left with a single functioning nucleus of Yiddish literary life in North and South America.

Creative forces in the Western hemisphere have been enriched by the literary She'erith Hapletah (remnants). Many Yiddish writers fled from East European and other European countries and found a haven in Israel. The majority of the other "refugees" have made their homes in the United States, Canada, Central and South America. Because the newcomers to the literary family are on the whole younger than the senior writers, one can safely assume that the average Yiddish writer in the Americas today is several years younger than formerly.

It is true that there are more writers today than formerly, but, unfortunately, there are less readers. Despite the lessening of demand, there is a large output of new Yiddish books, and a constant flow of new publications. Most of the new books are poetical works, ranging in style from primitive to extremely modern. We find verses in the folk-genre of Eliakum Zunser and Velvel Zbarzher — except that they possess neither the candour nor the didactic functions of their prototypes. At the other extreme we find poetry in the complicated and sophisticated style of Eliot and Auden.

Recent Yiddish poetry has been enriched by an abundance of lyric and dramatic poems, authored by the most outstanding representatives of older and younger poets such as: H. Rosenblatt, I. J. Schwartz, H. Leivick, Aaron Zeitlin, Melech Ravitch, Ephraim Auerbach, Chaim Grade, Abraham Suzkever, Berish Weinstein, A. Glanz-Leyeless, as well as the late Menachem Boraisha, David Ignatoff, Z. Segalovitch. There is also a revived interest in the sonnet form.

Yiddish fiction writers have in recent years shifted from the short story to the novel. The latest works of Sholem Asch, I. J. Singer, Joseph Opatoshu and I. Bashevis — which have been translated into English, Hebrew, and other languages — are novels.

The Yiddish press features, as always, high calibre stories and novels as well as tabloid-type fiction. Lately it has been sponsoring a third kind of fiction — which is a cross-breed between literature and simple journalism. Its only resemblance to the high-calibre novel is that its subject matter is gleaned from Jewish history — including the history of Jews in America.

Contemporary Yiddish prose and poetry occupies itself more with the past, especially the recent past — than with the present. Our fiction writers are concentrating on the "old country" rather than on their new one. Even the Tercentenary celebration of Jewish life in America failed to stimulate interest of Yiddish fiction writers on American Jewish themes.

One reason is the language spoken by the American Jew. It is either English or Anglicised and jargonised Yiddish. For the writers of the older, primitive-naturalist school this was no obstacle. But contemporary Yiddish writers recognise the importance of dialogue and monologue in the art of story-telling and they are reluctant to resort to translating or editing the speech of their characters, for it would result in artificiality. Therefore, they turn to the past — the old home — that distant milieu which was more integrated and had more style and form in its scope as well as in its language. Moreover, they can see it in perspective, and therefore, with greater clarity.

There is still another motivation. The destruction of the Old Home has created a mood of mourning and farewell — the desire to perpetuate it by telling its history, erecting a tombstone over its grave. Thus all Yiddish literature today resounds with the

"And Judah Shall Dwell Forever And Jerusalem From Generation To Generation"

ADDRESS ON THE TWELFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE STATE OF ISRAEL

BY PRESIDENT BEN ZVI

For generations upon generations the Jewish people has been in a state of subservience to foreign rule and of dispersion among the nations of the world. But even in the days of its homelessness and distress our people never forgot the era of its freedom, when it dwelt peacefully on its own soil; it never gave up its hope and its right to return to its historic homeland and to renew its independence as of old; and it never ceased to believe that the hour of redemption must and would arrive: it was this faith that preserved it in life.

If we have been privileged to experience that which our predecessors, from the time of the destruction of our Temple to the present day were not privileged to experience, namely to be the first generation of the redemption, it is surely incumbent upon us to recall the last three generations, which sacrificed so much for the return to Zion and the re-establishment of our nation in its ancient homeland.

Let us recall the cherished memory of our great leader, the hundredth anniversary of whose birth we celebrate this year, the memory of Theodor Herzl who proudly hoisted the banner of freedom, the banner of "The Jewish State" half a century before it came into being: who accomplished the closing of the ranks of this scattered and far-flung people in anticipation of the State that was to arise two generations later. This seer prophesied in an impassioned call to this people that before the passage of another fifty years the vision would become reality: and his prophecy was fulfilled.

It was not without travail, not by speeches and proclamations alone, that the State came into being. A full generation before Herzl's call, "deliverers went up on Mount Zion", working pioneers who dared to break through the Ghetto walls in this country as well as in the Dispersion, and, through hard physical toil, revived the homeland that had been laid waste, the land from which centuries ago our forefathers were uprooted. Throughout these returners to Zion, our fathers' hopes and prayers to the Redeemer of Israel for the renewal of our independence and the rebirth of sovereign Israel, as in days of yore, became reality.

Had it not been for the World Zionist Organization founded by Herzl, for the daring pioneer work of Jewish youth, for the courageous moral and material assistance, the true brotherly aid of our brethren in the Dispersion, before the rise of the State and thereafter, had it not been for these, the absorption of immigration and the reconstruction of the homeland would not have been possible. And had it not been for the spirit of self-sacrifice of the pioneers of Jewish settlement on the soil of the homeland and of the men and women of the Haganah and the Israel Defence Army, who gave their lives for the freedom of their people, the whole economic, social, and cultural structure that is the young State of Israel would not have risen.

Yet all we have achieved in these twelve years is but a beginning. For the great majority of our people is still scattered among the nations of the world, and the greater part of the soil of the homeland is still semi-barren, crying out to us to redeem and revive it.

Our faith is firm that more of our brethren will come to our land from other countries to strengthen our ranks, guided and inspired by the example of the early pioneers and the fighters for our people's independence. It is true that there is no end yet of the designs of the enemy that has laid siege to us. Daily he repeats his threat, for all the world to hear, to destroy this people and wipe the name of Israel from the face of the earth. But we are a much-tried people, and we shall stand firm, secure in our strength and the justice of our cause: for "no weapon formed against us shall prosper", and, with the help of the Almighty "we shall both do mightily and shall surely prevail."

Our wishes go out to our brethren in the Dispersion for their welfare and for the strengthening of the heart of the younger generation with a Jewish education in theory and in practice. May we witness the realization of the age-old yearning for peace, real peace between us and our neighbours, peace throughout the world, and may the words of the prophet be fulfilled: "And Judah shall dwell for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation".

anguished cry of the post-Hitler era: "The tree of Jewish life has been uprooted, long live its genealogical tree in our literature!" Our great heritage is described in various forms: novels and short stories, history and biography, personal memoirs, ghetto-chronicles, and most of all, memorial books sponsored by the Landsmanshaften.

Memoir-literature first appeared on small scale after the first World War, describing war life in the small town and its bitter repressions. Today its thematic framework is, unhappily, vastly enlarged, depicting on a mammoth canvas the annihilation not only of the town itself, but of all its inhabitants.

During and after the second World War almost all of Yiddish literature, and particularly its poetry, overflowed with the motifs of grief and wrath. Those who "had not been in Treblinka" were tormented by guilt because they were unable to remain silent, as were Job's friends when they came to console him, and "sat down with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights, and none spoke a word unto him; for they saw that his grief was very great."

Modern day Eliphazes and Bildads could not remain mute. The difficulty, on the one hand, of finding words to express "the grief that was very great," coupled with the overpowering need for unburdening their sorrow, became the leitmotif of Yiddish poetry immediately after the catastrophe. Now only restless echoes of Jeremiah's Lamentations remain.

But those who WERE in Treblinka cannot free themselves from their heavy burden; they still have much to tell. So that while new, brighter tints are filtering into lyric poetry, our prose is still engulfed in the shadows of the world that is no more. Ours is still a literature of memoirs, documentation, history.

The youngest, most active Jewish publishing house has in recent years published over 100 books dealing with Polish Jewry. Even Israeli publications, such as "Die Goldene Keyt" and others, while concerned with the new life being built around them, cast frequent glances into the past.

Such a reminiscent view must, inevitably, be gloomy. But although eulogies are still being made, there has been a steady brightening of the horizon, and there is a distinct leaning toward a serener and more optimistic retrospect. The pursuit of lamentation, canonization, selecting and preserving everything of value in our literary past and heritage, is an aspect of this tendency to sum up.

To judge its value and achievements can only be accomplished by analysing individual works of more unique Yiddish writers. It would then become evident that our literature, which during and immediately following the cataclysm was a kind of chorus (with solos), is gradually normalising and becoming what a literature should be: a world circumscribed not only by the collectivity and its representatives, but one in which we hear the voices of originally-creative individuals who probe deeper, see further, and rise above the community.

the unauthorized transfer of Eichmann from Argentina.

On July 5 Israel asked Argentina to consider the Eichmann case closed. The note said that three of the eight supporters of the Security Council resolution on the subject had made it clear that they regarded the expression of views by the Council as an apology by Israel as "adequate reparations" for the violation of Argentine sovereignty.

"No member of the Council has offered any challenge to this interpretation of the resolution," the Israeli note said, according to the New York Times. The Israelis thus tacitly but firmly rejected the demand in the Argentine note of June 8 for the return of Eichmann.

population were only temporary."

Information on Eastern Germany, the report says, is considerably scantier. Yet it says that the same conclusions can be drawn — that in the long run the economy benefited and that inequality existed between the refugees and the rest of the population.

Dealing with refugees of other nationalities in Europe, the report says that most preferred to settle down where they found themselves or to be resettled in other countries other than their homelands, says the New York Times. "The problem of European refugees under European mandate has been virtually solved," says the report, although it noted that a "hardcore" of refugees still existed in Europe — the aged, the ill, and the handicapped.

Of Israel the International Labor Organization report says: "The size of the outside contribution must not be allowed to overshadow the sheer hard work put in by the entire population. But the problem will not be finally solved until the Israeli economy has ceased altogether to depend on foreign assistance, and this will take a good many years."

The report estimates that 750,000 Arabs fled Israel after the United Nations partition decision and in the Arab-Israeli war that followed. Most plans for employing the Arab refugees were abandoned as uneconomic and the refugees themselves opposed any plan "which smacked of resettlement."

"Even assuming that the political climate in the area does gradually improve, it is hard to see how the problem of the Palestine refugees can be finally settled for many years to come," says the report.

The report draws a distinction between the effects of forced political migration and economic migration of persons searching for a better life.

"Political migration has often exerted a disrupting influence on the economies of the countries where it originated while in receiving countries it has led, at least in the short run, to heavier expenditure, unemployment and inflationary processes," the report explains.

"Economic migration, on the other hand, has benefited both emigration and immigration countries by providing an outlet for the energies of millions of men. Whereas the refugees have often been forced down the occupational and social ladder, the migrant worker has usually been able to better his lot."

Political refugees, however, usually have been absorbed in a community with the same languages and traditions, says the New York Times. The economic migrant, the report points out, has had a more difficult time becoming a part of the new society.
